BUGGESTED BY THE DEATH OF RON. In the Warm pulsations of a many heart. With impulse true as needs to the pole. We sought for truth; with eager eye scanning the sought for truth; with eager eye scanning the pure incitements of an honored life. His was true love for leiters and for art. Which fired his fancy, moved his facile pen. And brought him ever-welcome company. He was a scholar, but was teacher, too; From mind well stored as cound draw forth The lessons he had learned, the faces historic which ne'er failed to charm his listener's ear, and student, teacher, friend, he was in obe.

He was a courtly man, polite and brave, lith manners of a polished gentieman; a envious word e'er passed his nonored lips r falsebood marred his life; bis kindly smile labited at childhood's laugh; while servants si is kindners and his care.

Twas not in books, ne, his hands were busied; in nis fields watched the progress of the growing grain, and out his meadows, dited the swotlen stream sought to make the lands that 'round him lay, a in their basuty and their growing tilth, reproduced throughout the summer's day aweet content that Variel once had sung, spanned the Roanoke with a Cresar's bridge.

The muse historic weens her lover dead! The College mourns her Chancellor laid low; the County where he lived bemoans his loss; the county where he lived bemoans his loss; the salive Norrolk claims his honored dust; but names like his die not. Still GRIGSEY lives n many a loving heart-on history's page, but his life-work, bravely, nobly done, by mead and uphand, fruitful by his care, its footsteps seem to linger, and the trees, leaved or well, in yet by the summer's breath.

Farewell, dear noble friend! in brighter worlds nobler work is thine; may it be ours, been our briet day is cose, with faith as trusting and with heart as strong, to bid farewell to earth.

WRITTEN ON THE MORNING OF THE 22D OF MOVEMBER, 1877, WHEN I ENTERED MY SEVENTY SACOND YEAR. BY HUGH BLAIR GRIGSBY.

LORD of the flaming orbs of Space! LORD of the Ages that are gone! LORD of the testing years to come. Who slitest on Thy Sov'reign Throne:

III.

In Thee-in Thee aione, Oh Lord!
Thine aged servant puts his frust,
Thro' the blest passion of Thy Son.
Ere his frail frame returns to Dust.

Uphold him 'bro' Earth's cevious ways, Sastain him by Thy gracious Power; And may the Glory of Thy Praise Break from his lips in Life's last Hour.

Grant the dear Piedges of Thy Love
Thy Mercy bath vouchsaf'd to me,
PRACE in the shadow of Thine Ark—
REST 'neath Thy sheltering Cherubim.

KEST 'neath Thy sheitering Cherubim. VI.

Lord, heed Thy servant's grateful Praise
For all the Mercues Thoo hast given—
For Hahih and Friends and Leigth of Days
Tny Bleeding Son—a promised Heaven.
VII.
Oh! may he live in fear of Thee—
Oh! may he res upon Thy Love
When he shall cross that stormy Sea
Timt keeps him from his Home above.
VIII.

Oh! bless those lov'd ones of my Heart.
While ling'ring on Earth's lonely Shore.
Till we shall meet no more to part.
And chant Thy Praises evermore.

A Sonuct on Spring.

Sweet Spring drives o'er the hills her flowery car,
soft breezes fly before ber merry tra n;
o'dd Winter, weeping on the mounts afar.
Rolls down a flood of tears into the plain.
The ann drives nearer with his ferry steeds,
Then dashes off again in mock affright;
The farmer scatters 'round his fertile seeds.
And melow furrows hide them from the light.
Sweet-scented back are barsting in the woods.
And windy harps send forth their softest strain;
The s'ately poplars weep beside the floods
And sing unto the winds a sad refrain.
So Spring, 'haid smiles and tears, drives on her way
Apd leaves the earth to Summer's milders way.

FARMVILLE, May 17, 1881.

LYNCHBURG. PRIMARY ELECTION-DEATH OF A LOVELY LADY-THE YORKTOWN CENTENNIAL-DR.

HOGE-OUR POST-OFFICE-DEPOT IMPROVE-MAY 19, 1881. The Conservative primary election is pro ceeding quietly and does not seem to excite much interest. The vote is small up to this writing, and the regulators or bolters are not participating, and the regular ticket will be chosen without opposition.

Mrs. Mary H. Gish, wife of Mr. R. E.

Gish, and daughter of Judge David E. Spence, died yesterday of consumption. She was an excellent lady of lovely character.

There will be a meeting in this city tomorrow night in the interest of the Yorktown Centennial. Addresses will be de-livered by Hon. John Goode, Major Daniel, Colonel George T. Rogers, and others. Last night the Rev. Dr. Hoge preached an able sermon in the Second Presbyterian church from the text, "The Disciples were first called Christians in Antioch." Doctor's visit has afforded much pleasure to his many friends and admirers in this city, A rumor prevailed yesterday that Cap-tain Wilson. postmaster of this city, had been removed to make way for a Mahoneite, but it proved to be without foundation. Captain Wilson is a straight-out Republican, declines to bow the knee to Mahone and is confident of retaining his position. The work of renovation and repairs at the Norfolk and Western Railroad depot in this city is rapidly nearing completion. The exterior appearance of the structure has been very greatly improved, while the interior has undergone a perfect transforma-tion. The walls have been all repapered, the wainscotting handsomely grained, and other desirable improvements effected. TELEPHONE.

There Was No "Foul Play." [For the Dispatch.]

Some short time ago an article appeared in one of the Alexandria papers under the heading "Was There Foul Play?" baving reference to the death of Mr. Charles Maurice Smith, late a citizen of this city, and well and favorably known in this community.

reference to the death of Mr. Charles Maurice Smith, late a citizen of this city, and well and favorably known in this community.

Mr. Smith died on the night of the 1st day of April last en route from Fredericksburg to Port Royal, and a warrant was recently issued charging Addison Giles (colored), the driver of the vehicle, with killing Mr. Smith, under which he was arrested and committed to the jail of Caroline county.

Rumors, assuming no definite shape and traceable to no particular person, having been widely circulated, and coming to the ears of Mr. Willism B. Matthews (the travelling companion of Mr. Smith), implicating him is said charge, he left Washington on Monday last and came to Caroline county, having previously demanded a legal investigation of said matter. This investigation was had on the next day at Skle's Store, in and county, and first all the writewees. was had on the next day at Sxle's Store, in said county, and after all the witnesses for the Commonwealth (seventeen in number) had been examined (Matthews introduced sone), the Commonwealth's attorney, who conducted the examination, arose and said that he felt constrained to say that the tes-timeny failed to fix even a suspicion of guilt on either of said parties; and the sit-ting justices so decided. The matter com-menced in rumor and ended in a fizzle. RECEMOND, May 20th.

That Murder Mystery.

IT IS UNRAVELLED AT LAST-WHO THE UNFOR-TUNATE WOMAN WAS.

JERSEY CITY, N. J., May 18.—The identity of the girl whose body was found in Opdyke woods last Friday has been fully established. The girl, whose name was Mina Miller, resided at No. 1511 Second avenue, New York, with Louis Kettler, a bricklayer, who is proven boyond a question of doubt to be ther murderer. On the 30th of May last Mina Miller left their home in New York, and was seen to cross the Hoboken ferry. From there they went direct to the parsonage of the Rev. Dr. Mahone, of the Grove church, on the Weavertown road, near Union Hill, where they were married, and the bride sent for a low in the state of the case of the lift where they were married, and the bride sent for a low in order for a low unions shave no honing. give no trouble, one lasts a lifetime. bottle of Rhipe wine, with which they left the parsonage together. They returned to the parsonage afterward and desired the minister to drink with them, but upon his refusal the man and wife went off together, taking the bottle (still unopened) with them. They were next seen at the saloon of Mrs. Finck, when the girl entered and asked for a corkscrew to open a bottle of wine, and, having procured it, the man opened the bottle and the girl drank about half the contents, the man refusing to drink anything but so da-water. They left Mrs. Finck's about a o'clock, the girl borrowing a copy of the Ztaats Zeitung to wrap up the bottle of wine, both of which were found alongside of her remains. Mrs. Finck says that the girl had a pocket-book well-filled with gold and bills, and also a very handsome watch, with a chain around her neck, neither of which were found. It was inferred that Louis Kettler must bave returned directly to New York and boarded the steamship Amerique, upon which he staid until she sailed the next day. District-Attornery McGill has telegraphed to Attorney-General MacVeagh, asking him to cablegram to the French authorities and cause the arrest of Kettler. the French authorities and cause the arrest
